INTRODUCTION

At the instance of the Indian Historical Records Commission, a series of compilations relating to the inscriptions on Christian tombs and monuments has been published by the Government of India and by the various Local Governments. These are now nearly complete and the writer, who had already had a small part in this work, welcomed the opportunity which opened in 1936, of listing the inscriptions of H. E. H. The Nizam's Dominions. The long association of Hyderabad with European travellers and merchants, and with the Dutch, French and English East India Companies, and the constitution of the Hyderabad Contingent made this work interesting ; and when it was completed in 1940, the Right Hon'ble Sir Akbar Hydari, President of H. E. H. The Nizam's Executive Council, ordered its publication at the expense of the State in uniformity with the previous volumes of the series. I am greatly indebted to H. E. H. The Nizam's Government and especially to Sir Akbar Hydari and to the Political and Archæological Department for all their help and support.

In order to keep in line with the earlier publications the monumental inscriptions of all officers and of their wives and children have been listed up to 1862, the year which saw the extinction of the Company, although this event had far less effect in the Nizam's Dominions than in the rest of India. After 1862 the names of women and children have been omitted, except in the case of those whose husbands and fathers had had some direct connection with the State or had served in the Residency, the Civil Departments or in the Contingent. Exception to this rule has also been made respecting those families whose forbears came to Hyderabad as adventurers, and remained, bequeathing to their sons the traditions of State service. The names of officers who fell at Assaye and who lie in unnamed graves close to the villages have been tabulated, and those whose deaths are recorded in the pages of Dodwell and Miles, or in the Roll of the I.M.S., are placed in chronological order in the cemeteries of the stations where they died, for though many of the inscriptions have been removed from the older cemeteries, it is safe to assume that they were buried there. In cases where the deaths of officers were reported from places where no regular cemeteries had as yet come into being, the names are collected for reference under the heading of the towns or villages where they lived.

For the biographical notes I have to thank the courtesy of the officials in charge of the Records of the India Office. My thanks are also due to Lieutenant Colonel H. Bullock for his ready assistance with the notes on Local Officers and their families, and above all I have to thank Major V. C. P. Hodson, who, for the third time has allowed me to make use of his encyclopaedic knowledge, and although busily engaged with his own important work, has always found time to give whatever information was asked of him. The Dutch translations were made by Mr. Wuthrich and the Director of the Lyceum, Souryabaya, and the Portuguese by Dr. A. Pope of the Osmania College for Women.

If the inscriptions recorded in this book have, on the whole, proved less interesting than those of earlier volumes, the fault lies with history, which as far as the English element is concerned, contained less of incident than the records of most Provinces or groups of States. Elsewhere stress of siege and battle, and the tragedy of the Great Mutiny so often formed a background to the lives and deaths of the Europeans, and provided incidents and opportunities of a stirring kind. Here, in spite of alarms, only one major campaign touched the State, but on the other hand connection with the West goes back as far or further than in many of the Provinces, and it may perhaps be well to set out the series of events which led to the presence of large numbers of Europeans within the borders of the State. It is a question when European penetration into the Deccan first began, but it seems probable that a considerable number had worked their way into the interior at a far earlier date than is generally supposed. No tangible evidence of this infiltration appears however until 1636, when one John Drake writes to the President and Council at Surat to say that he had " arrived at the lashkar which is at Kirkey (Aurungabad) 6 cos wide of Daulatabad " and that he had " delivered their letter to the Padre who was living with Mirza Zulhane ". This Mirza Zulhane seems to have been a prominent member of the flourishing Armenian colony which lived at Aurangabad for nearly two centuries, and disappeared with the Moghul Empire, leaving no mark upon the city beyond the cemetery at Kotela outside the Paitan gate, which still contains 42 inscribed graves. The Kutb Shahi King appear to have regarded Europeans with favour, for when Tavernier visited Hyderabad in 1645 he stayed with Peter de Lan " a young Dutch chirugion belonging to the King, whom the Sieur Cheteur, Envoy from Batavia had left at the King's earnest entreaty." He also speaks of the effort of the King " to pursuade Father Ephraim, a Capuchin, who passed through Bhavnagar (Hyderabad) on his way to Pegu, to stay with him, offering to build him a house and a church at his own expences, telling him that he should not want employment, or hearers, for there were several Portuguese Christians, and several Armenians who came thither to trade." Manucci speaks a little later of finding Augustinian fathers at the court of Abul Hasan, the last of the Kutb Shahi dynasty.

No doubt Portuguese, Dutch and English sailors deserted their ships, now and then, and attracted by high promises held out to them by the warring princes, took service with them. Tavernier tells the story of a Dutch cannonier at Daulatabad and speaks of " all the cannoniers of the army being Franguis as well as he." The grave of Gomes de Faria at Parenda (1654) may well belong to such a one. This grave, oddly enough, lies beneath the dome of the Durgah Sharif, and besides the tomb of the holy pir Badruddin in whose honour a large urs is held each year. No doubt too, merchants and diamond cutters, lured by tales of the fabulous wealth of Golconda, flocked to the city ; of them a vague tradition lingers, and it is said that a deserted cemetery at Jahanuma was once used by the diamond cutters. It may be so, but the cemetery lies conveniently close to the old cantonment of the Shumsul Oomra and the inference is that it was chiefly used by the humbler military adventurers of his service. One Dutchman who appears to have been a merchant, and who died in 1662, is buried in a little Armenian cemetery at Opiguda. The records of the Missions d'Étrangères refer to Père Frachey who died at Bhavnagar in 1668, while on his way to Siam, but it has not been possible to trace his grave, though he may have been buried in the vicinity of Jahanuma, where a cave is pointed out as having once been the dwelling place of Catholic Priests. Here Hinduism has re-asserted itself and the missionaries' cell has become a temple.

Emissaries from the Dutch East India Company had penetrated to the courts of the Kings Abdullah and Abul Hasan, and had there received charters granting them the right to establish factories in Golconda and Masulipatam, and also giving concessions in certain villages on the road to the coast, where they seem to have established warehouses or small depots. One of these villages was Nagalawalcha near Khammamett, and here a stone still commemorates Abraham van der Vort "Undermerchant and Second of this Factory" who died there in 1676. This grave had long been lost, but was traced by the writer from a reference in the manuscript diary, now in the India Office, which was written in 1789 by the adventurer, Michael Finglas.

It was not till 1744 that the English merchants of Madras sent an embassy to the Nizam Asaf Jah, and by then the struggle between the French and English for pre-eminence in India had already begun. When Asaf Jah died in 1749, a dispute regarding the succession arose between his son Nasir Jung, and Mustapha Jung his favourite grandchild. In the war that followed, Dupleix sent to the aid of the latter 400 Europeans and 2,000 sepoys from Pondicherry, and no doubt as a move to frustrate French influence in the Deccan, the English despatched a small force under Stringer Lawrence to uphold Nasir Jung. The French candidate was defeated, but in 1750 Nasir Jung was murdered by one of his nobles and Muzaffar Jung seized the gaddi. The new Nizam invited Dupleix to send him a trusted officer and a force of Europeans to act as his bodyguard, and M. de Bussy with 300 Europeans and 2,000 sepoys was accordingly sent to join him. On the march to Hyderabad Muzaffar Jung was also murdered. Salabat Jung, another son of Asaf Jah was then a prisoner in the camp, and de Bussy, to prevent disorder, placed him on the gaddi and continued the march. As a result of this action French influence became paramount in the State, and the revenues of the Northern Circars were given for the support of the French contingent. De Bussy retained a strong position in Hyderabad till 1758 when he and his men were recalled to Pondicherry to take part in the attack on Madras. No tombs now remain to mark the period of de Bussy's power, but a number of forts throughout the Dominions bear witness to the skill of his engineers.

In 1779 a British Resident was installed at the court of the Nizam, and eleven years later a fresh treaty with the Company arranged for two battalions of sepoys, with British officers, to be supplied to the Nizam who was to be responsible for their pay. A clause of the treaty however, stipulated that they were not to be used against the Allies of the Company.

In the meantime Salabat Jah was poisoned in his turn, and was succeeded by another son of Asaf Jah, Nizam Ali Khan, and a little later a small French force which had been in the service of the remaining brother, Basalat Jung, passed at his death, into the hands of the new Nizam. This force under Raymond, served in the Mysore War of 1792, and in 1795 took a prominent part in the battle of Kurdlah. As the two British battalions were prevented, by the terms of their treaty, from fighting against the Mahrattas, Nizam Ali Khan decided to dispense with them, and Raymond's force and privileges were augmented. His successful suppression of the revolt of Ali Jah at Bidar, led to a still greater extension of his power, and Raymond's influence with the Nizam became such that the Company feared, in the event of the old man's death, that the General might seize the State for France. In 1798 however, Raymond himself died, and was buried on the Usmangarh Tekri in Malakhpet. Until the Great War it was the custom of the Irregular Troops to parade at Raymond's tomb on the anniversary of his death. A salute of 21 guns was fired, and with the band of the Maisaram (Monsieur Raymond) Regiment playing the Marseillaise, a bottle of beer, a box of cheroots and a box of matches especially sent by the Nizam, were laid in the little shrine opposite his grave. Although this practice has now ceased, a small pilgrimage is still made to the tomb on January 5th, but the pilgrims are mostly Hindus and not the descendant of Maiseram's Arab troops. On Raymond's death his brigade was disbanded at the instance of Lord Mornington, and the French cantonment with all its gunfoundries, stores, magazines and arsenals passed into British possession. Only two graves at Jahanuma remain as witnesses to the French society which flourished in Hyderabad at the end of the 18th century. In this same chapel is buried also Colonel Michael Finglas, the only British adventurer who rose to eminence in the Nizam's service, and who was, to some extent the rival of Mons. Raymond. Finglas' corps had served in the Mysore War of 1798. During the campaign H. M. 33rd Foot was attached to the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force and the Nizam's Contingent, and Colonel Arthur Wellesley was placed in command of this division, as his relationship to the Governor-General made him acceptable to the chief Muslim officers. At the close of the Second Mahratta War, when another treaty provided for a regiment of the King's Troops being sent to the new cantonment under the Husain Sagar, this connection was kept alive, and the 33rd was the first British regiment to be stationed in Hyderabad. A monument to the memory of 137 men of the regiment still stands in the little cemetery near the Old Lancer Lines.

But the time for cantonments was not yet. After Holkar's defeat of the Peshwa at Poona in 1802, the latter fled to Bassein where he entered into treaty with the British. By this treaty the British promised protection to the Peshwa on condition that he kept up a Subsidiary Force and accepted British arbitration in any quarrel which he might have with the Nizam. The Mahrattas, ready enough to dictate to the Peshwa themselves, resented any outside interference, and war became inevitable. Wellesley was ordered to advance with his own troops and the Poona Subsidiary Force; Colonel Stevenson with the Hyderabad Contingent was to march on the Godavari, while Lord Lake was to be ready in the north. Once more the old game of French and English came on the board, for the drilled Mahratta troops were officered and trained by Frenchmen. Some tentative negotiations were attempted, but the Mahratta chiefs, though they kept negotiations open, gave truculent replies and prepared to invade the Nizam's Dominions. Wellesley taking this as a declaration of war, stormed Ahmednagar, and then in co-operation with Colonel Stevenson, marched against the Allies who were raiding the Deccan, and regardless of the season and the difficulties of transport, chased them back by forced marches towards Bhokardan. On September 23rd Wellesley came up with the enemy at Assaye and a bloody battle was fought in which nearly half his force was killed or wounded, but although the battle of Argaum was still to be fought, and Asir and Gawilgarh to be taken, the Mahratta power was broken, and the campaign decided on that tongue of land between the Kailna and the Jua. Nearly 200 Europeans were buried to the west of the village on the following day, but the only grave that can still be seen is that of Colonel Maxwell of the 19th Dragoons, of whom Wellesley wrote "I would rather have lost a brigade than have lost Maxwell." Maxwell's was a personality that still survives, for as Ussell Sahib, he has become the patron saint of Assaye village, and the villagers keep his grave clean, and deck it with chirags and marigolds. The body of Scindia's principal European officer, Colonel D'Orton, was also found on the battlefield, and at Ajanta there are two uninscribed graves which are said to be those of officers who died of wounds after the battle.

The next cloud to threaten the Dominions was a curious one, a mutiny among the officers of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, stationed at Jalna and Secunderabad. These officers were largely drawn from the Madras Army and the Madras Army was notoriously ill-disciplined. In 1807 Lt. General Hay MacDowall became Commander-in-Chief at Madras, he was "an officer of great 'sensibility' but of no great distinction" and he soon fell foul of the Governor, Sir George Barlow, who was engaged in carrying out, firmly and efficiently, the policy of reform and retrenchment dictated by the Directors. MacDowall resigned his post after a quarrel connected with his seat in Council, and while awaiting his boat to England, seized the opportunity of fomenting agitation against the suppression of the Tent Contract System, which had been ordered by the Governor in Council before Sir George Barlow's arrival in Madras. This order, though necessary, was intensely unpopular, and the General succeeded so well in his subversive activities that when, in a General Order distributed after his departure, he deliberately incited the senior officers to resistance, their response was immediate. Sir George, hoping to check the trouble, suspended some of these officers, but his action had the reverse effect. The officers in Travancore declared themselves ready to resist Government, and at Jalna those of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force expressed the same sentiments. The officers at Secunderabad despatched a threatening address to the Governor demanding the immediate reinstatement of their suspended comrades and this was circulated throughout the Presidency. It was known that the Subsidiary Force was completely equipped for Field Service and its adhesion to the party in favour of revolt greatly strengthened the mutineers. The first act of open mutiny took place at Masulipatam, but in Secunderabad some troops ordered to Goa refused to march and sent an ultimatum to Government. Barlow promptly organised a striking force and put Madras in a state of defence, he then issued a Test Declaration to all units, and those officers who refused to sign it were sent to the coast, their place being taken by King's officers. This measure killed the mutiny in the Presidency. Sir Barry Close was then despatched with the Test to Secunderabad where the officers refused to meet him, and when he explained matters to a troop of cavalry on the parade ground, the whole brigade turned out to oppose him, and it was due to good luck and his own clear head that he was not shot down, there and then, by his brother officers. That evening he left the cantonment, and during the night three units of the Force beat to arms, under the impression that they were about to be attacked by H. M. 33rd Regiment. Just as the clash seemed inevitable, reaction set in, and the disaffected men awoke to realities and signed the Test. Meanwhile in Jalna, regardless of a Mahratta raiding party hovering on the frontiers, the officers of the Subsidiary Force prepared to join the Secunderabad mutineers. They marched on the 14th August, only to be met on the following day by the news of the collapse of the mutiny in Secunderabad. The news was received with indignation, but a fortnight later they too accepted the inevitable and signed the Test. Government having vindicated its authority, treated the outbreak with the utmost leniency, and by a General Order of the 25th September, which was not the least amazing part of an amazing episode, gave the majority of the ringleaders the choice between Court Martial or Dismissal. Among these was Captain George Poignand, who had been elected by a Committee of Officers to command the revolting Madras Artillery after their original nominee, Captain John Noble, had been arrested and sent to the coast. Both these officers were subsequently re-instated, Captain Poignand died in command of his battery at Jalna in 1820, while Captain Noble, who organised the first Horse Artillery in the Madras Army, and whose memorial stands in the Gunner Lines in Trimulgherry, became Lt. Colonel and died at sea in 1826.

The revolt of Mubariz Jung against his father, Sikandah Jah in 1815, is commemorated in the Residency Cemetery by the grave of Lieutenant Darby. He was shot from a housetop while accompanying the newly formed Russell Brigade in its attack on the Prince's Palace which lay in the heart of the City. The Brigade, though still in its infancy, was at that time the only efficient and reliable body of troops in the service of the Nizam. It owed its origin to Mr. (afterwards Sir) Henry Russell. Shortly after his arrival in Hyderabad as Resident, Mr. Russell submitted a report to Government pointing out the lamentable state of Berar and the northern districts, which were liable to inroads by the Mahratta Naiks. The Subsidiary Force could not be used against these freebooters for they were in the service of nominal allies of the British Government; while owing to slack discipline and irregular pay, the Nizam's Regular Troops were too inefficient and weak to check effectively internal disorder, or external aggression. The Resident therefore applied for leave to recreate these troops, under the command and general control of British officers, whom he was to select from the Company's Army, from retired King's and Company's officers and from the best of the British subjects already in the Nizam's service. The last two classes of officers were to be given Local Commissions. It was further proposed that this force should draw its pay from the State, but to insure regularity, it was to be drawn through the Resident's Treasury. In 1812 Russell obtained sanction to raise two regiments on the proposed lines, but as a result of mutinies among the Nizam's troops stationed at Malakhpet and at Indur (Nizamabad), the scope of the sanction was extended and artillery was also added to the new Brigade. So successful was the reform of these regiments, that the infantry stationed in Berar was next taken in hand and placed on a similar footing, and in 1816 the Nizam's cavalry was also reconstructed under the command of Captain Evans Davies. Mominabad which dominated the northern ghats, was selected as headquarters of the Cavalry Division, and was only abandoned as a cantonment in 1903, when the Hyderabad Contingent was finally dissolved. Thus at the outbreak of the Third Mahratta and Pindari War in 1817, a well disciplined, well equipped force of horse, foot, and artillery was in being and able, not only to protect the State against the depredations of the Pindaris, but to take its place with credit in the Army of the Deccan. Some of its units served with distinction in the battles of Nagpur and Mehidpur and in the siege of Malegaon; and at the close of the main campaign, the Contingent troops were successfully employed in the reduction of the insurgent strongholds within the Dominions, and in the pursuit of the scattered remnants of the Mahratta armies.

The formation of the Contingent naturally led to a general increase in the European population of the State, and it also attracted a number of people who were undoubtedly inspired with a stronger desire to serve their own interests than those of the Company or of the Nizam. One such, William Palmer, already in State service, was a man of some ability, well acquainted with local politics and ready to make the most of his opportunities. He retired from military service and appeared to have the control of large sums of money, and in 1814, when the question arose as to how the pay of the reformed troops could be guaranteed, the Banking Firm of Palmer and Co., conveniently established in Hyderabad, undertook to advance the money to the Minister, Chandu Lal, at the rate of 2½ lakhs a month, for the payment of the Contingent. The revenues of certain districts were assigned as security for the money advanced, yet in spite of the strength of the position thus obtained by the Bank, it insisted on interest at the rate of 25%. Three years later the firm was joined by Sir Thomas Rumbold who had married a ward of the Governor General, Lord Hastings, and his intimate relations with the Governor General proved of advantage to the firm. They continued to advance loans to the Minister until their claim on Government amounted to about a crore of rupees, and their influence in the State had assumed dangerous proportions. In 1820 they advanced a further loan of Rs. 60 lakhs to Chandu Lal, and the privileges of the Bank became the talk of India. A few months later Sir Charles Metcalfe became Resident of Hyderabad, and his attention was immediately drawn to the situation. On enquiry he found that only a small proportion of the latest loan had reached the treasury, and that Palmer and Co., had received 8 lakhs as a bonus for its negotiations. Sir Charles Metcalfe at once presented these facts to the Governor General, who refused to interfere. The Resident persisted however in his attempts to put a stop to this undesirable state of affairs, and enquiries were at length instituted, but when it was found that the claims of the House amounted to a crore of rupees, Lord Hastings insisted on its liquidation. A deed bearing the signature of the Nizam, and relinquishing in perpetuity his claim to 7 lakhs of rupees payable annually as peshkush for the Northern Circars, was handed to the Resident by Chandu Lal. On receipt of the deed the Governor General remitted a crore of rupees to Hyderabad, and the claims of Palmer and Co., were settled. By this time however the case had become a cause celèbre in England as well as in India, Lord Hastings' action was severely censured by the Board of Directors and Metcalfe was also blamed. In 1828 the firm which had so long dominated the State became bankrupt. Of the principle actors in this affair George Rumbold died in 1820 and was buried in the Residency Cemetery, his brother Sir William, whose connection with the firm had spoiled more than one reputation, outlived the storm and was buried near him in 1833, while William Palmer himself, lived on till 1867 and would have died in indigence had it not been for his wife's private fortune. He is buried with others of his family in St. George's Cemetery in Chadarghat.

The disappearance of the Banking House of Palmer did not however, put an end to the difficulties experienced in meeting the cost of the Contingent, and of certain other political expenses. The level of administration in the State was then very low, money was scarce, and in order to cover the monthly pay-rolls, the chouth, and the sums due to the Mahrattas, Government soon contracted new debts. Matters gradually went from bad to worse, the debts and arrears grew, till in 1853 Lord Dalhousie decided on intervention. On 21st May 1853, Nizam-ul-Mulk signed a treaty with the Company whereby he ceded the districts of Berar, the Raichur Doab, and the borders of the Sholapur and Ahmadnagar Collectorates to the management of the Resident at Hyderabad, that their revenues might be devoted to the upkeep of the Contingent and to the liquidation of the allowances to the Mahrattas. British officers were installed in the Berar Districts, in Daraseo, Lingsugur and Raichur where their families soon followed them, and little cemeteries began to grow beside their bungalows. In 1860, however, these territories, with the exception of the Berars, were restored to the Nizam in recognition of his very valuable services throughout the Mutiny. But the financial difficulties of the State have deflected us from the main stream of our narrative, and it is necessary to retrace our steps to 1820.

After the termination of the Third Mahratta War no external hostilities disturbed the Deccan, but an unruly element within the State necessitated the retention of the Contingent, and raiding parties, rebellious Arabs and Rohillas in the various Zamindaries, and even the Irregular Troops, provided the Contingent with constant employment.

The Contingent itself was not entirely free from storms. In 1827 the introduction of certain innovations into the 3rd Cavalry, then stationed at Mominabad, was badly handled by two young officers, and a number of the men broke into open mutiny, and going to the parade ground with loaded muskets in their hands, demanded their discharge. The Commandant, Colonel Evans Davies galloped to the spot and was immediately shot down by the mutineers. The remainder of the sowars, who up to then had looked on, were infuriated by the murder of a much loved officer, and they instantly charged their comrades, killing the majority and seizing the rest, who were subsequently court-martialled and hanged. Colonel Davies is buried in the Cantonment Cemetery.

The following year the Arabs at Dandoti revolted and Lieut. Stirling of the Cavalry Division, then engaged in Civil Duty at Gulburga, joined a body of troops who were besieging the fort, and was killed in an unsuccessful attack on the main gate. His grave is untraced.

The pursuits, actions and sieges of the next few years were free of officer casualties, but during the insurrection of the imposter Appa Sahib who claimed the gaddi of Nagpur, the Hingoli Division moved against the rebels at Gaori in the Yeotmal District of Berar and after a hard fought action totally defeated them. The Brigadier and three of his officers were wounded on this occasion, and the Brigade Major, Thomas Lysaght, died of his wounds, and was buried beside his wife at Hingoli.

A month later the Warangal detachment under Lieut. Humphrey Howarth pursued a rebellious zamindar and his Rohillas across the Godavari to Badrachellam, which he attacked and carried in the fierce June heat. Next day the Commandant died of heat-stroke. It is interesting to note that thirty years earlier his father, another Humphrey Howarth, was killed by Pindaris during a similar pursuit in Bundelkhand, but his son, the third Humphrey, died in childhood at Aurangabad, and the family tradition of service to the Company died with him.

In 1853 the Raja of Deolgaonraja, who had allowed his Arabs to go too long unpaid, was seized by his men, and realising the danger of his position, appealed to the Brigadier at Aurangabad for help. The Brigadier at once ordered a demonstration in force against the city, in a suburb of which the Raja was held prisoner. The demonstration was undertaken in a somewhat light hearted manner and after having marched up to the walls, demanded the surrender of the Arabs and been refused, the officers decided to breakfast before advancing to the attack. Unfortunately the breakfast was laid out on a chabutra within range of the defences, and no sooner was it served than the Arab insurgents fired a volley into the party, killing Captain Parker and Ensign Bosworth. Some accounts state that Lieut. Vaughan was also wounded, and eventually died of his injuries, but this is not corroborated by the despatch or by the inscription on his tombstone, though he died soon after the attack and was buried beside the others in the Cantonment Cemetery.

When the Mutiny broke out in 1857, the Contingent had been in being for forty years. During that time scarcely a month had passed without some portion of the force being on active service, discipline was good and the officers in close touch with their men, but it must be remembered however that a large number of the personnel were recruited from Oudh, so that in spite of the factors in favour of their loyalty, no certain prediction could be made that they would remain true to their salt. In the districts the Rohillas were a grave danger, and emissaries from Tantia Topee could be relied on to stir up disaffection in Mahratwada. The news of the massacres at Meerut and Delhi shook the City deeply, but the Resident, Major Davidson was a man of strong character, much liked by the Nizam, and his influence, and the staunch attitude of the great Minister Salar Jung, saved the Deccan. In June the leading maulvis preached revolt, and the walls of the City were placarded with notices calling on the Faithful to rise. Major Davidson ordered the General at Secunderabad to parade his troops in full marching order, Salar Jung stood beside the Resident at the review, and the first crisis passed. A fortnight later another attempt was made to rouse the City. Salar Jung immediately despatched a large body of Arabs to the Mecca Musjid where the Maulvis were preaching the Jehad, and closed the gates. Order was once more restored, but the situation was so precarious that the General requested the Resident to leave Chadarghat. Major Davidson replied "I have taken a fancy to leave my bones in Hyderabad, if necessary I will fight to the last." His wish was subsequently granted, but his death was not at the hands of the mutineers. In July the news of the massacres at Cawnpore and Jhansi raised a fresh mob of Rohillas at the Mecca Mosque, and this time they reached the walls of the Residency garden, which was stoutly defended by a body of the Contingent and Madras troops. Musketry and grape, and the powerful influence which Salar Jung brought to bear on the Rohillas proved too much for them, and at daybreak the next morning they retired, and no further attempts were made to provoke revolt in the City.

In Aurangabad the situation was yet more dangerous and the Contingent troops were on the brink of rebellion, but the resolute action of Captain Abbott the Commandant, assisted by a chance event that raised the superstitious feelings of the men, swung the balance to the side of loyalty. On 13th June Abbott received information that the 1st Cavalry had raised a standard in their bazar, that the maulvis were inflaming the men by their preaching, and that an attack would be made at dawn on the cantonment. Arrangements were made to evacuate the women, and a guard was placed on the bridge over the Kham River which led to the Cavalry Lines. During the night, however, a storm of unusual violence arose and a hurricane blew down the standard. To the excited minds of the sowars the fallen flag was an omen, and though they came to the bridgehead on the following morning, their leaders could not induce them to attack Captain Abbott. After a few anxious days General Woodburn's column arrived from Bombay, the disaffected men were disarmed, and the ringleaders hanged. Afterwards the Contingent units whose loyalty had hung by a thread in the first weeks of June, returned to their duty, and served with distinction in the Malwa, Central India and Gwalior campaigns, from whence their letters describing Sir Hugh Rose's victorious sweep northward, and the part they themselves had played in it, acted as powerful propaganda against the forces of disorder.

In the districts however, the turbulent elements, encouraged by the general feeling of unrest, began to raid their neighbours and to offer resistance to Government, and throughout 1858 and 1859 the remaining units of the Contingent were fully occupied in the pacification of the country.

The Raja of Shorapur was the first to break away from his allegiance, and in February 1858 a body of Contingent troops, supported by a column from Bombay, marched against the town. The Bedars were defeated and evacuated Shorapur during the night, but not before Captain Newberry had been killed during a mounted reconnaissance before the walls. He is buried at Anandpur, a few miles from where he fell. A month later Lieut. Stuart, who commanded two companies of the 6th Infantry, was killed in an engagement with insurgent Bhils at Nandgaon, his grave has not been traced, but his name is commemorated in a brass in Bolarum Church. In 1859 Captain Mackinnon was mortally wounded in the assault on Chichumba, where a large body of Arabs and Rohillas, hotly pursued by Brigadier Hill's column of Contingent and Berar troops, had taken refuge. It was in this action that Captain Clogstoun, who died at Hingoli two years later, won his V.C. by bringing the insurgents to bay in the village. After a forced march of 36 miles, the last six of which were taken at a gallop, Clogstoun came up with the enemy when they were already in sight of safety, and although only eight of his men had been able to keep pace with him, he immediately charged the insurgents and drove them into the fort. Then, though badly wounded himself, he formed up the stragglers of his regiment as they reached Chichumba, and patrolled the exits of the village until the rest of the column arrived.

The excursions and alarms which followed the Mutiny were not concluded in the Dominions until 1860, but there were no more casualties among the British officers, and with the pacification of the country and the improvement in administration, peace settled on the Deccan. The extension of road and rail facilitated transport, the last of the Bhil and Rohilla gangs were put down or settled on the land, and it became possible to close down, one after another, the tiny cantonments scattered throughout the Districts, until at last the Contingent was concentrated at Aurangabad and at Bolarum. In 1903 when the Contingent was finally abolished, these stations were taken over by the Indian Army.

To-day a few ruined bungalows, some avenues of trees and the deserted cemeteries, alone bear witness to the work of the European soldiers and administrators in the Districts ; but here and there the swing of the pendulum has brought back the spiritual descendants of Père Frachey and Peter de Lan, and after long absence they have opened their schools and hospitals beside the ruins of the dead Cantonments.

There is no country in the world where personality counts for so much as in India, and those who possess a certain indefinable quality of strength and picturesqueness, may become at death, legends in the countryside. Of such was Leonard Munn who died at Lingsugur in 1935, and was buried beside the wife of another, Colonel Meadows Taylor. The spirit of Meadows Taylor seems to brood over Shorapur, and his memory is alive in all the districts he administered. Munn, geologist and first head of the Well Sinking Department, also touched the imagination of the people, and he brought water within the reach of hundreds of villages in the famine tracts of Raichur. Now, four years after his death, he is fast becoming confused in the minds of the ryots with a local demi-god Manappa. In time to come when all the monuments are in ruins and the names of such men as Wellesley, Metcalfe and Malcolm are forgotten in the State, four Europeans will be remembered by the people, Maiseram, Ussell Sahib, Meadows Taylor and Leonard Munn. The Indian villager does not judge greatness as the world judges it, but his tribute of remembrance is no mean monument nor is it given lightly, and we can take pride in the fact that in so many districts in India one may find the names of some countryman, long since forgotten in England, but still remembered by the humblest among the people whom he once served.

			at St. George's, Hanover Square, Frances Banbury. Sailed 1804 and was appointed to the charge of the Residency in Persia, and in 1806 to that of Hyderabad. Resigning this office in 1810, he proceeded to England, was sent on a confidential mission to the Peninsula by Lord Wellesley and became Chargé d'Affaire at Lisbon. Early in 1812 he joined the Earl of Wellington in camp and served with him as a volunteer in the campaign of that year. He then repaired to the headquarters of the Russian Army and took part, in company with his friend Count Woronsov, in the battles of 1812. His gallantry at Craon procured him the Cross of St. George from the hands of the Emperor Alexander, while Bernadotte presented him with the Swedish Insignia of the Sword. On the conclusion of the peace Sydenham was appointed British Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Lisbon, but his career was cut short by an incurable illness at Geneva 28th August 1816. Disturbances in Hyderabad City, August 1815.

On 20th August 1815 the Nizam, Sikandah Jah, requested that the Russell Brigade, which consisted of four European and 121 Native Officers and 800 sepoys, should be marched into the City to suppress a disturbance created by Mubaruz-ud-Daula, his youngest son. The Prince, who was supported by his brothers, had control of a number of Arabs and of irregular troops, and these, posted in the houses on either side of the narrow streets leading to his palace, put up a determined resistance and inflicted heavy casualties on the advancing column. The Brigade pushed on however, and blew in two of the palace gates, but the musketry fire poured down from the roofs, became so heavy, that after a severe conflict the force was obliged to retire. Lieut. Darby of the Resident's Escort was among the killed. The princes were eventually removed to Golconda and order was restored in the City.

16	16th Oct. 1818	A. Russell ..	Anne, the infant daughter of Henry Russell, who died the 16th October 1818, aged 10 months and 19 days. Sir Henry Russell Bart (1783—1852) Son of Sir Henry Russell, 1st Bart, Chief Justice of Bengal and his 2nd wife, Anna Barbara, youngest daughter of Sir Charles Whitworth, and sister of Earl Whitworth, British Ambassador to Paris after the Peace of Amiens. Resident at Hyderabad 1808, and again from April 1811 to Dec. 1820. On his arrival in Hyderabad in 1811, Russell found disorder in the districts and the army in a mutinous condition, unable to repel aggression from without, or to keep order within. He therefore arranged for the raising of new regiments under British Officers, the sepoys being drawn from the best material of the old army, and these were formed in 1813 into the famous Russell Brigade. He next undertook the reform of the Berar Infantry and in 1816 completed his work by re-organizing the cavalry. By 1817 an efficient body of horse, foot and artillery, paid

J. A. Kirkpatrick, Lt. Col. 9th M. N. I., b. 28th Aug. 1764. 2nd son of Capt. James Kirkpatrick, Madras Cavalry, and of Keston, Kent, and his wife Katherine, née Munro, who were m. Madras 14th March 1762, she d. 27th Jan. 1766, aged 22, M. I. Bombay Cathedral. Educ. at Eton. Sailed for India in the "London" 12th Feb. 1780. Entered the Madras Army 18th Oct. 1780. Invalided home within ten years, but returned in time to serve in the 2nd Mysore War. In 1793 comdd. in Vizianagram, and from there was appointed Persian Translator with the force serving under the Nizam. At the death of Lieut. William Stewart. (See No. 4), became Asst. to his younger brother William Kirkpatrick, Resdt. at Hyderabad. William was compelled soon afterwards to proceed on sick leave to the Cape, and James succeeded him as Resdt. and held the post for nine years, during which time he negotiated three important treaties; by the most important of which a British Subsiduary Force was to replace Raymond's French Contingent. Married in 1800, Khair-un-nissa Begum, grand-daughter of Akil-ud-Dowlah, Buxi or Paymaster of the British Subsiduary Force. This marriage was made the subject of reports to Calcutta by Kirkpatrick's enemies and Lord Wellesley ordered an enquiry which completely exonerated him. Two children were born of this marriage and the two wells were built to commemorate the dates of their births. Catherine Aurora, the elder, married Capt. James Winsloe Phillips, H. M. 7th Hussars, and died 2nd March 1889, at Torquay. She is the Kitty Kirkpatrick of Carlyle's "Reminiscences" and is said to be the Blumine of "Sartor Resartus". William George, her brother died young, leaving a widow and three children. Chinnery's portrait of the two children in Eastern dress is now at Mr. Paul Phillipps' house at Torquay, it formerly hung in the Rang Mahal or Zenana which Kirkpatrick built for his Begum and which was pulled down in the sixties by order of Sir George Yule. Kirkpatrick was given the title of Hashmat Jung, the "Magnificent in War" by the Nizam. The Hashmat Ganj, a small grain market at the gate of the Residency is called after him. Died in Calcutta 15th Oct. 1805.

96	20th May 1867	W. Palmer ..	This monument contains the remains of William Palmer who died on the 20th May 1867, in his 87th year. He had been a Resident of Hyderabad for nearly 70 years, where he was prominently known and his memory requires no record. But he desires anxiously that the goodness of Hester Palmer his wife (See No. 102.) towards him should be known by this record drawn up on his deathbed. She was his comfort for the last 20 years of his life, which was involved generally in difficulties & distress. Her strong mind & good sense supported him during his sickness, & contributed to prolong his life, & her private means were employed to maintain him in ease and comfort when he was penniless, as they were subsequently to educate some of his grand-children, whom she loved, though not connected by blood, as though they were her own, and which she continues to do. May the blessings of Almighty God be with her and her grandchildren and with us all. William "King" Palmer, son of General William Palmer (1750-1816) Military Secretary to Warren Hastings, & his wife, Bibi Faiz Buksh, Begum of Delhi. Entered the service of the Nizam as Lieut. in Finglas' Bde. 1899. "He took rank of Capt. from the officers of his regiment—the 14th Battalion—and glided into his majority by being Bde. Major to Col. Stevenson, commanding the Subsidiary Force during the Mahratta War of 1802-3". (Madras Mail, 11th April 1885). 			campaign. In 1808 when Mohipet Ram rebelled against the Nizam's Govt. was selected by the Resdt. & Mir Allum to negotiate with him, & in subsequent action and pursuit, was in charge of the Intelligence Dept. vice George Sydenham. In comd. of Nizam's troops which were sent to reduce Gordon's mutinous troops 1812. Received thanks of Lord Minto and was appointed Presidt. of the C. M. which tried the ring-leaders. In 1814 Palmer left the military service and established his Banking House in Hyderabad. Shortly afterwards he offered to relieve the Nizam's Govt. of the financial burden of the Contingent which was then being re-constituted by Henry Russell, by lending 2½ lakhs per mensem for two years, the security being an assignment on the land revenue of the Dominions and the interest 18%. This was agreed to by the Prime Minister, Chandu Lal, and sanctioned by the Govr. General the Marquis of Hastings, who in 1820 used his influence to force the Nizam to settle his account which had become very large. The Resdt., Sir Charles Metcalfe strongly opposed this action and the matter went home to the Court of Directors and an enquiry was held. On the departure of Lord Hastings the debt, which had swollen to 83½ lakhs, was paid off at 80 lakhs. In 1828 the firm which had for so long dominated the State went bankrupt. W. 192	17th July 1800	M. Finglas ..	Here is deposited the body, and to the memory of Michael Finglas this is inscribed, Colonel of His Highness the Nizam's Service, who departed this life on 17th July in the year of our Lord 1800, and in the 37th year of his age. M. Finglas, late Capt. and Quartermaster H. M. 19th Dragoons. and created Nawab Khoon Khar Jung (the Falcon or Spiller of Blood) by Nizam Ali Khan, b. 1764, an Irishman. The name of Finglas appears in Dublin records as far back as 1338 when the family were of some consequence, but it has now entirely died out in Ireland. Michael appears to have belonged to the Westphalstown branch. Educated at Douai. Came to India as Quartermaster of the 19th Dragoons but left that Regiment before 1789, when he was in the service of Raghoji Rao Bhonsle, the Raja of Nagpur, and with a mixed force of 300 men was employed by him in collecting tribute from recalcitrant chiefs on the outskirts of the state. Finglas was next introduced into the service of the Nizam as a counterpoise to the French force under Raymond. In 1795 Finglas Corps numbered 800 men and took part in the battle of Kherdla, where the Nizam's army was ignominiously defeated by the Mahrattas under Perron. In 1796 Raymond was at the height of his power and it was rumoured that he meditated an attack on the British Resident's camp, there upon Finglas promptly paraded his corps and signified his intention of supporting the Company's cause. The danger however blew over and he was not called upon to act. In 1798 Finglas' Brigade formed the bulk of Mir Allum's army which fought under Wellesley against Tippu Sultan. After the death of Raymond the French army was disbanded and the question arose as to whether or not Finglas, whose force had now risen to 12,000 men, should be allowed to retain his corps. Lord Wellesley however as a reward for his services during the Mysore War sanctioned its continuance and in addition, permitted Finglas to purchase ordinance, stores and muskets from Fort St. George. The Finglas Brigade was still in existance in 1867, and some of Michael's descendants were serv-

Their son Frank, who married a Portuguese lady, is buried just outside the precincts of the Chapel at Jahanuma but this grave has lost its inscription. His son, John Finglas, Comdt. of the Nizam's Bodyguard, m. 1st, Miss Rousseau, 2nd, Miss Hermerline Gomez, 3rd, Miss Fruvall. As a result of a palace intrigue he was compelled in 1869, to enforce an order to auction the silledar horse of his regiment, and on his way home after the auction he was attacked by the infuriated sowars, dragged from his palki and murdered. He was buried in the Roman Catholic Cemetery at Narayanguda, where the mortuary chapel was built in his memory though it bears no inscription. John Finglas was succeeded in the command of the Nizam's Bodyguard by his son David, then a child. Capt. David Finglas retained command for about ten years, when he become Asst. to the I.G. of Police in the Nizam's Dominions. He died in 1939. (See Nos. 65, 200, 201).

MALAKHPET

207	25th Mar. 1798	M. J. M. Raymond	J. R. A lofty obelisk, uninscribed except for the letters J.R., stands on a terrace 180 feet long by 85 feet broad, on an eminence known as the Maiseram Tekri, or Monsieur Raymond's Hill, about two miles from Hyderabad. At one end of the platform is a small building like a Greek temple, where offerings were laid at the time of the urus. Until shortly before the War 1914-1918 the whole of the Nazmi Jamiat or Irregular Forces, including the Maiseram Regiment, made a pilgrimage to the tomb on the anniversary of Raymond's death, a salute of 21 guns was fired and a band played a tune which resembled the Marseillaise, while the shrine was decorated with lights and tri-colours. The late Nizam was in the habit of sending a box of cheroots and a bottle of beer which were laid in the shrine with the other offerings. This custom is now entirely discontinued, but on the 2nd Jan. a small procession of about 200 Hindus visit the tomb with music, and deposit cocoanuts and sweets on the shrine.

			MALAKHPET—(Contd.)
			Michel Joachim Marie Raymond was born at Serignac, 25th Sept. 1755. His father was a merchant, and in Jan. 1775 Raymond sailed for India with the idea of setting up a branch of the business in Pondicherry. He soon abandoned trade however and entered a corps in the service of Tippu Sultan which was commanded by the Chevalier de Lasse. Fought against the British in the campaign of Trincomali and when de Bussy returned to India in March 1783, Raymond joined him as his A.D.C. Later he was with Basalat Jung's contingent at Guntcor and when this force passed to Nizam Ali Khan, Raymond commanded it in succession to the younger Lally. Raymond gradually altered the composition of his force to an Army Corps of twenty sepoy battalions, officered by Europeans and maintained from the revenues of the jaghir of Medak. Remains of one of his gun foundaries are still visible near the Fatteh Maidan. For some years Raymond was the greatest power in the State and the British Government were apprehensive that at the death of Nizam Ali, Raymond would seize Hyderabad for the French Govt. but this danger was removed by his own death in 1798. His successor Jean Henri Piron, was a man of little ability, and the discipline of the corps declined rapidly, and their popularity declining with it, the British Resident, Major James Achilles Kirkpatrick (See No. 50.) was able, six months after Raymond's death, to execute a treaty with the Nizam under the terms of which the entire foreign contingent was to be disbanded. The operation of disbandment was a delicate one, the sepoys were in a state of mutiny, and had placed their officers under restraint, and for a while a sanguinary action appeared to be inevitable. Bloodshed however was avoided by the courage and address of John Malcolm, who at great personal risk entered the lines, and meeting with deserters from the Company's troops was recognised by them, and was then able to pursuade them first to liberate their officers and then to listen to the conditions of surrender. On Oct. 20th 1798, 14,000 men and 124 officers laid down their arms and surrendered to the British troops under Colonel Roberts.

			BOWENPALLI LINES
			A little to the right of the Nagpur Road, just north of Bowenpalli village is a small enclosure containing two graves. One is inscribed to the memory of Lt. J. Moore, the other to "The Horse of Lt. J. Moore." About 50 yards away, let into the guard wall of some steps which lead down to a well, is a tablet, bearing the following inscription :— "This is about the place where Lieut. Moore met with his fatal accident." The width of the steps is about 9 feet between the walls, which appear to have been heightened to prevent any repetition of the tragedy. The depth of the steps at this point is about 15 feet. Moore is said to have possessed a horse which was an unusually bold jumper and on his return from parade was in the habit of putting his horse across the steps of the well. A senior officer visiting Bowenpalli was informed of this feat and expressed a desire to see it. It happened that on this particular day Moore was in bed with fever, he was pressed to get up, and against his own wish made the jump which was fatal to horse and rider.
209	9th July 1807	J. Moore . .	Sacred to the memory of Lieut. John Moore, Adjt. (1st) Regt. N. C. Obiit 9th July 1807, aged 26. A second inscription has been added to the front of the tomb. 			KOTELA CEMETERY
			This cemetery contains 42 Armenian graves in good condition. It lies between the 38th and 39th milestones on the city side of the Jalna—Aurungabad road, not far from the Paithan Gate. During the time of the Moghul domination a flourishing colony of Armenians lived at Aurungabad and were protected by the rulers, but after the death of Aurungzeb the colony disappeared.

Arab Disturbances in Aurungabad Sept. 1853.

In 1853 a sharp conflict occurred between Contingent troops and the Arab mercenaries of Raja Mansingh Rao of Deolgaon. The Raja, a hopeless spendthrift, had allowed the pay of his Arabs to fall considerably into arrears, and they, despairing of procuring their money by ordered protest, seized the Raja and threatened to kill him if the sum due to them was not immediately forthcoming. Mansingh finding himself unable to satisfy his men and fully alive to the danger of his position, appealed to Brigadier Mayne, Commandant of the Station, for help, and that officer sent a summons to the Arabs to give up the Raja. The Arabs refused, and Mayne decided to make a demonstration against them. On the morning of Sept. 22nd a force consisting of the 5th Cavalry, the 2nd Company of Artillery, and the 6th and 7th Infantry were marched up to the Arab stronghold which lay close to the Hindu temple in Jeswantpura, just outside the Roshan Gate. Here the Arabs, in fighting mood, were found to be occupying a strong position. The disposition of the troops having been made, some of the officers sat down to breakfast on a chabutra close to the city wall. While they were at table an Arab Chaous of the city appeared on the ramparts, and at a signal from him a volley, as unexpected as it was deadly, was poured upon the party of officers and men. Ensign Bosworth of the Bombay Army, who was on leave at Aurungabad and had volunteered for the occasion, was fatally wounded. Captain Parker, commanding the 6th Infantry and a number of men were killed. An attack was immediately organised, and after an obstinate resistance the Arabs were defeated and dispersed, and the imprisoned Raja was released. The Contingent losses in this encounter were 15 killed and 40 wounded.

			ASSAYE.
			The Battle of Assaye, 23*rd Sept*. 1803
			After the capture of Ahmednagar, Wellesley moved northwards. The armies of Scindia and the Bhonsla had ascended the Ajanta Ghat, with a view to carrying the war into the Nizam's territory; but Wellesley, by rapid marches up the Godaveri, headed them back towards Bhokardan. On September 21st he met Stephenson at Badnapur, when it was decided that the two divisions should move forward separately to Bhokardan, where the hircarrahs reported that the enemy had halted, and a joint attack was planned for the 24th. Wellesley accordingly moved forward to Naulnai on the 23rd, intending to strike on the following day. His intelligence concerning the enemies' position however actually referred to the taluq, not to the town of Bhokardan, and arriving on a ridge beyond Naulnai, the British Commander suddenly found himself in the presence of the hostile armies which were drawn up on a tongue of land enclosed by the Jua and Kailna rivers, their left resting on Assaye village. Thus unexpectedly faced by the huge Mahratta army, Wellesley saw that his only chance of success lay in immediate attack without waiting for Stephenson's force to arrive. The enemy, 50,000 strong, were drawn up in several lines behind their guns, and a dense mass of horse were arrayed on their right, stretching away as far as the eye could see in the direction of Bhokardan. Their front was protected by the Kailna which was swollen with recent rain, their rear by the Jua. Wellesley, noticing an unprotected ford on his right front, wheeled and crossed the Kailna before the Mahrattas could interpose. He then formed his force into two lines of infantry, either flank resting on a river, with the cavalry in reserve. The Mahrattas, their left turned, changed ground to meet the new line of attack, their left still resting on Assaye which was held by the French trained infantry. They had even now the best of the ground, but Wellesley's manoeuvre had lost them their greatest advantage, for on this narrow front their weight of numbers could not make itself fully felt.

Wellesley had intended to drive in the enemy's right before attacking the fort and village of Assaye, but Col. Orrocks, in command of the advance picquet, exceeded his orders and brought his men under a terrific fire from the guns massed round the village, and in a few moments they were virtually annihilated. The Mahratta horse charged the survivors, who in their shattered condition, broke. Wellesley then threw in his reserve. The charge of the British cavalry swept through the masses of the enemy horse, up to the guns where the gunners were sabred in the batteries, while the Mahratta Cavalry fled from the field.

In, the meantime the infantry attacked and drove in the enemies right, when the assault on the village was renewed. Here Scindia's sepoys put up a stubborn defence and there was some delay in bringing up the guns, which at the commencement of the action had come under heavy fire and had lost almost all their bullock teams and drivers. They were eventually manhandled into position. It was not till evening when the 78th led by Wellesley himself, charged down the central street and gained the fort, that the rout was complete; but the cavalry were then so exhausted that they were unable to pursue the enemy far beyond the Jua. The Mahrattas left 1,200 dead and wounded on the field. The British casualties were 2,057 out of a force of about 4,500 men, and of these 423 were dead.

Among the killed were:—

Lieut. Col. P. Maxwell, H.M. 19th Light Dragoons.

			BURIAL GROUND.
			The burial ground at Assaye lies at about a quarter of a mile to the west of the village. It is an irregular patch of scrub jungle surrounded by cotton fields. In the centre is a large banyan tree, and under it is a grave, scrupulously kept and decked with marigolds and chirags. It bears no inscription. The villagers say that it is the grave of Ussell Sahib, a tall fair man, who was killed in the evening of the great fight heading a charge across the river, that he was a great Bahadur and that now he extends his protection to the village of Assaye. This is clearly the grave of Col. Maxwell of the 19th Dragoons, and local memory is correct in detail.

Assaye; led the charge that broke the Mahratta horse before the fort and disabled the enemy guns. Later led the charge of the 19th, and the 4th and 7th N.C. against Pohlman's Brigade after the general rout had begun. "The infantry held their fire almost till the moment of contact when they raked the advancing cavalry and Maxwell fell dead." Mentioned in Wellesley's despatches of 23rd Sept. 1803, and in the General Order by the Govr. in Council, 30th Oct. 1803. His widow Catherine, was granted a pension of £ 300 by the East India Company in recognition of Maxwell's services. This was then the only instance of a pension granted to a King's Officer by the Company. Refs. the 19th and their Times and Gentleman's Magazine.

Siege of Nowah, Jan. 1819, in command of 3 rissalas. Attack and capture of Kopbal May 1819. In May 1827 Davies was at Mominabad where the cavalry were in a discontented state owing to various changes and innovations which were being made in their dress. On May 7th "one of the junior officers caused two men to be forcibly shaved. This outrageous measure resulted in a number of men assembling next morning on the parade ground where they set up a standard and took up a position with loaded arms. Col. Davies at once rode to the spot and tried to pacify the men, when he was shot down by a fusilade and then cut to pieces. Some of the murderers were killed on the spot by their comrades, others were subsequently courtmartialled and punished." The death of Col. Davies was a great loss to the force, for to his efforts had been due the successful reform of the Cavalry. A great shikari, and known to his contemporaries as Tiger Davies.

			The Battle of Gaori, 6th May, 1849
			When Appa Sahib, the claimant for the throne of Nagpur raised a rebellion in 1849, a small mixed force under Brigadier Hampton moved out of Hingoli to intercept them. Two forced marches of 25 miles were made, but the enemy moved as quickly and kept their distance, so on May 6th, the cavalry amounting to 114 sabres, covered 50 miles in the day and overtaking the enemy at Gaori, in Yeotmal District forced an action. The rebels, between 250 and 300 strong offered a desperate resistance, but Appa Sahib was wounded and taken prisoner with 95 of his followers, the majority of whom were wounded, 105 were left for dead on the field and only a handfull made good their escape. The officers of the Contingent cavalry suffered severely, the Brigade Major, Lysaght being mortally wounded, Brigadier Hampton, Capt.-Commandant Yates (See No. 373), Capt. Orr (See No. 807) and four Indian Officers being wounded as well as six sowars.

Disturbances in the Dominions, 1858-9.

Although, except for the Shorapur rebellion, no serious outbreak had occured in the Dominions during the Mutiny, a feeling of unrest pervaded the country, and the unruly elements within the State seized the opportunity of loot and dacoity offered by the absence of the greater part of the Hyderabad Contingent in Central India. Bands of Rohillas, Bhils and Arabs gave trouble, and in November 1858 a Force of Contingent troops was assembled under Brigadier Hill to put down these parties of marauders. After some successful operations in the Gawilgarh hills, Brigadier Hill returned towards Hingoli, and on Jan. 15th had reached Wakhed, when he received information that a large body of Rohillas and Arabs were engaged in plundering the neighbouring village of Risod. Although his force had already covered 35 miles in the last 24 hours the Brigadier at once started off in pursuit. The cavalry, under Major Clogstoun, galloped on and came up with the enemy at Chichamba, where they were already in sight of country which was broken enough to insure their escape. Seeing this, Clogstoun, who with a handful of men was far ahead of the main body, charged the enemy and drove them into the village; and as soon as the rest of the cavalry could arrive on their exhausted horses he, though himself severely wounded, formed them up and posted them round the village to prevent the escape of the Rohillas. On the arrival of the infantry and artillery, Brigadier Hill decided to attack the village, which consisted of scattered houses surrounding the fort in which the rebels had taken refuge. The Brigadier himself took command of the attacking force, the other European officers with him being Captain McKinnon who commanded the 3rd Infantry, and his Brigade Major, Captain Hoseason. The party advanced with skirmishers and guns on either flank, but they were received with a heavy fire and men began to fall. The fire increased as they neared the fort, Captain Mackinnon fell mortally wounded, and a second later Captain Hoseason dropped with a dangerous wound. The Brigadier tried to urge on the men to take the fort with a rush, but the sepoys, more anxious to remove their wounded commander, hesitated, and Hill finding himself entirely unsupported, was forced to retire. During the night however, the enemy, under cover of the darkness, moved out of the fort in a solid phalanx, 400 strong and made for the hills. The cavalry had anticipated this move and immediately closed in upon them, and in a short fierce fight that followed over a hundred were left dead in their track, though the remainder escaped into the ravines where the cavalry could not follow them. The contingent losses in addition to the casualities among the officers mentioned above, were 8 killed and 20 wounded.

He was severely wounded himself and lost 7 out of the 8 men who accompanied him." Pacification of the Berars 1858-59 with Brigadier Hill's force; operation in the Gawilgarh Hills; successful pursuit of a large rebel detachment from Hindi, 9th Dec. 1858, men. in desps. On 15th Jan. was with the pursuit of a large body of Arabs and Rohillas moving from Risod towards Jintur. "Clogstoun who commanded a squadron of the 2nd Cav. H.C. had pushed on so rapidly that he came up with the rebels near the village of Chichamba, only a few of his men had been able to keep up with him, but seeing that the country ahead would favour the escape of the rebels he immediately charged the enemy with 8 men and drove them into the village where they took shelter in the ghurri. Of his party 4 were killed and 3 wounded. He himself was wounded by a musket ball, received a severe blow from a musket and had his horse wounded under him. This charge enabled the cavalry to come up and hem the enemy into the village. Subsequently the infantry arrived and an unsuccessful attack was made on the ghurri, but the enemy marched out 400 strong under cover of night making for the broken country. The cavalry however awaited them and inflicated heavy casualties. Clogstoun, in spite of his wounds and a march of 36 miles followed by a day's fighting, joined in the pursuit." (*Ref. 			DANDOTI
			Attack on Dandoti 3rd Jan. 1828.
			Towards the end of 1827 a number of insurgent Arabs had taken refuge in the ghurri at Dandoti and from this point of vantage were raiding the surrounding country. When this news was brought in to Gulbarga, Lieut, Stirling put himself at the head of his own cavalry escort and a small body of the Nizam's troops then stationed at the district headquarters and marched to the village, which they reached on the morning of Jan. 3rd. The gate of the village was thrown open by some of the inhabitants and Stirling, accompanied by a few men advanced towards the ghurri, sweeping a number of Arabs before them. Before the gate of the fort was reached Stirling was wounded, but he cut down one of the enemy, pistolled another and pushed on to the wicket where he was shot through the body with four bullets and died leaning against the gate. Three men who were with him were also killed and one wounded in a vain attempt to force their way in, and then the remainder of the little force retired and established themselves in houses which commanded the gateway. Here they remained until the arrival of Capt. Eric Sutherland's contingent forced the Arabs to surrender. According to Meadows Taylor's account in "The Story of My Life" p. 33, the Arabs were allowed by the Commissioner to march off without molestation just as the punative force arrived.

Outbreak in Shorapur, 1858.

In the end of 1857 Raja Pid Naik of Shorapur revolted, and was joined by some Mahrattas and by a strong body of his Bedar clansmen. In February 1858 the Belgaum and Kurnaul Moveable Columns and a detachment of Contingent troops under Capt. Wyndham marched against the town, where they arrived on the 7th and proceeded to occupy a low ridge to the S. E. of Shorapur. That evening the camp of the Contingent troops was strongly attacked by the Bedars, but on the arrival of the British Force the enemy was beaten off and driven back into the town.

Next morning Captain Newberry and Lieut. Stewart, with a small escort, were sent forward to reconnoitre the walls. As they were passing the village of Venkatpura the party was fired on by some Rohillas hidden in the bushes behind the village; Newberry fell, and the escort galloped off with his subaltern who was severely wounded. The Rohillas thereupon broke out of their hiding place, and finding Newberry's body, cut off his head, which they carried with them into the town. This incident was witnessed by the Raja who was stationed on a rocky pinnacle above the walls, as well as by a number of towns people. Later in the day the Raja, feeling that further resistance was useless, escaped from the town and the Bedars, rendered leaderless, followed his example. By nightfall the insurgents were scattered in the surrounding hills and the troops entered the town without opposition. Three of the Rohillas concerned in Newberry's death were subsequently caught and hanged on the bastion close to the Infantry Lines.

Pacification of Warangal District, 1849

When in 1849 efforts were being made to clear the country of roving bands of Rohillas and dacoits, the Warangal detachment under Capt. Howarth, consisting of a troop of the 3rd Cavalry and a wing of the 3rd Infantry, marched on 3rd June against a rebellious zamindar and his Rohilla adherents. Arriving at Bhadrachellam on the 10th June, Capt. Howarth invested the place, giving the rebels one hour to lay down their arms. He then attacked and after a few hours struggle during which he lost 3 killed and 6 wounded, the enemy laid down their arms, but he himself succumbed to heat stroke immediately after receiving the surrender of the zemindar.

			Nagalawalcha was the centre of the Deccan indigo trade during the 17th century and the ruins of a large building known locally as the duftar can still be seen there. This factory was probably a depot or sub-factory under Masulipatam, for in 1687 a remission of road tax on travellers from "Nagalwance" was granted to the Dutch E.I. Co., with a number of other concessions. The firman in which these concessions were made appears to confirm the details of an earlier agreement between Abdulla Kutb Shah and the Company. *Ref. 			DICHPALLI MEMORIAL CHAPEL
1143	Dec. 1932	I. Kerr ..	This House of Prayer was built to the Glory of God and in love and honour of Isabel Kerr. Isabel Kerr B.A. (Aberdeen) M.B. Ch. B. née Gunn, wife of Rev. George Kerr of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission. Arr. in India 1907. A few years later Dr. Kerr erected some grass huts at Nizamabad to shelter a number of lepers who came to her for help from the neighbouring villages. Her work was curative, news of it spread to other sufferers and lepers began to pour into the town. The inhabitants objected, so land was acquired at Dichpalli where the first huts were soon replaced by permanent buildings, and by Government help and private subscription the hospital grew rapidly and speedily became the largest leper asylum in India. Dr. Kerr was awarded the Kaiser-i-Hind Gold Medal for her services. Died December 1932 and was buried in Dichpalli where a chapel was erected in her memory.
